INTERVIEWER: Welcome to “Life in the Wild.” Tonight, Michael Coleman is with us. He’s a wildlife photographer and he lives in Africa. Michael, can you tell us what your usual workday is like?

MICHAEL: A typical day would be like this: I follow some lion tracks along a river bed. The tracks are fresh, so I know that the lions are close. I suddenly see six lions. There is a mother with two cubs. It is a dangerous situation. If the lioness feels that her babies are in danger, she will attack. Slowly, I climb up a tree. Imagine me and my camera so close to all those lions! I’m lucky to be alive!
