Bread

Bread has been one of the principal forms of food for man from the earliest times. When ancient man discovered bread, we could say that civilization began. The ancient Egyptians had word-pictures, or hieroglyphs, representing bread and bread was found in ancient Egyptian tombs. The Romans made several kinds of bread and gave them interesting names, such as "artolaganus" or "cakebread," and "speusticus" or "hurry bread." The rich ate special bread made of flour, milk, eggs, and butter.

The trade of the baker is one of the oldest professions in the world. Bakers were always respected. In Rome, they had special rights and were considered freemen of the city. Even today, bread is perhaps the most important food in our diet. Many of the things we eat, such as ice cream or candy, we do not need and we would be healthier without them. However, a healthy diet should always contain bread.
