Galileo Galilei

Galileo Galilei was born on February 15, 1564 in Pisa, Italy. When he was a child, he made small mechanical toys with things he found at home. At the age of 10, he went to school. He got good grades. His father wanted him to study medicine, but Galileo preferred mathematics.

After university, Galileo got a job as a teacher at the University of Padua. During that time, he built a geometrical compass and invented the first thermometer; however, his greatest invention was the telescope. For the first time, man could see other planets and outer space. Without this invention there would be no space programs today or journeys to the moon. Galileo died at home at the age of 77, on January 8, 1642.

Over the years, Galileo's telescope has become better and better. Now, we can all watch the planets at night, just like Galileo did centuries ago.

What type of person was Galileo? We know he had some personal characteristics that helped him invent. He was very observant and curious. He always wanted to find the answers to his questions, and if he didn't find them, he looked for them himself. He was also patient because he was a teacher.

Some important lessons from Galileo are: Ask questions, watch everything around you, and try to find answers yourself.
