Getting help in an emergency

In the U.S. and Canada, people dial 911 to report emergencies on the phone. They call 911 if there's a fire, an accident, or a crime being committed—any situation when someone is hurt or in danger of being hurt. However, 911 is never used for mechanical emergencies such as when a person's car has broken down. Look at these situations:

Kate's best friend had taken too many pills, but she was afraid to call. In fact, she should have called because calling can mean the difference between life and death.

Burt called 911 after a car accident, but as soon as he finished describing the situation, he hung up the phone! Burt should have stayed on the phone until the operator told him it was OK.

Martin called 911 by mistake and immediately hung up. Experts say he shouldn't have hung up. In fact, you should tell the operator what happened so that he or she knows that there is no real emergency.
