Body Art

Did you ever wonder where the practice of “body art” started? From a global perspective it’s nothing new. In fact, it dates back thousands of years! More recently, body art has been popularized by a number of celebrities including Madonna.

Both men and women have worn pierced earrings since ancient times. In many African and Amazonian tribes, various types of body piercing are common. In modern culture, ear piercing increased in popularity in the 1960s. Since the 1990s, other types of body piercing have become fairly mainstream.

Body painting has also long been a part of many world tribal cultures. In Moroccan villages, women decorated their hands with henna before getting married. Polynesian tribal chiefs in the South Pacific were recognized by their tattoos. Their bodies were decorated from head to toe in elaborate patterns that displayed their status in the community. Tattoos were applied with needles sometimes made of bird beaks or claws. Ink was made from plants, fish bones, coconuts, and other natural sources.

Do you know where the word tattoo comes from? It’s from the Polynesian word tatau.
